ness that the bogus receipt dodge was discovered. The passenger will dig up a tax receipt of some other man who has paid his taxes. In some cases the receipt is passed up as it were, and will then often be discovered to be phony as the name on it does not cor-161. Beretania between Smith and respond with the traveler's other papers. In other cases the trick is evident by its crudeness. The name of the original holder of the receipt, to whom it was issued, is overlined and the name of the departing man substituted. In other instances the original name has been erased and the new one written over It. Since the officials caught on to these tricks a number of these second hand receipts have been gathered in and are now held at the tax office. No legal steps have been taken in the matter but it would be quite practicable for the officials to strike the original own er of the receipt for taxes and collect two amounts from him as he would not be able to show his receipt for the first payment. As a rule the departing Japanese are quite willing to dig up their taxes when requested in order to get away. When they refuse the officials have a remedy against them b
